Society of Architectural Historians and University of California Press Announce Partnership to Publish *Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians

February 5, 2009

Berkeley, California – University of California Press Journals + Digital Publishing is proud to announce that the Society of Architectural Historians, a not-for-profit membership organization and learned society that promotes the study and preservation of the built environment worldwide, has selected UC Press as its new partner in publishing the Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians (JSAH), beginning in January 2010.

The Society of Architectural Historians—Seven Decades of Scholarship

The Society of Architectural Historians is the leading international learned society that promotes the study, interpretation and preservation of the built environment worldwide. Nearing seventy years of service to the field of architectural history and its related disciplines, the Society's membership of approximately 2,500 individuals includes professors of architectural and art history, architects and other design professionals, preservationists, museum curators, students, and others united in their passionate interest in architectural history. Institutional members include other learned societies, university libraries, art and historical museums, and preservation organizations around the world.

JSAH—published since 1941—is widely recognized as a leading English-language journal on the built environment. Published four times per year, each issue offers three to four scholarly articles on American and international topics, reviews of recent books and architecture exhibitions, and a variety of editorials designed to place the discipline of architectural history within a larger intellectual context. Subscriptions to JSAH are a benefit of membership in the Society of Architectural Historians.

Launching the Next Generation of Scholarly Communication

Central to the SAH/UC Press publishing agreement is the reshaping of JSAH's online presence to incorporate a wider variety of digital content—including zoomable images, video and audio clips, and geographic information systems (GIS). In addition to this enriched multimedia content, JSAH back issues from the last three years will also be available digitally via UC Press' Caliber online hosting platform, and prior issues, with a rolling three-year embargo, will continue to be available online through JSTOR's digital archive. The first issue of JSAH featuring this enriched multimedia content will publish in March 2010.

"The Board of SAH and Editors of JSAH are delighted that the Society is entering into a new partnership with University of California Press. The launch of JSAH Online will open vast new possibilities for publishing scholarship in our field. We appreciate that UC Press has agreed to make significant changes to their online publishing platform to accommodate the Society's vision of a dynamic online journal that can integrate not only photographs and drawings, but also film, video, sound, 3D models, and sophisticated mapping, into scholarly articles about the built environment. It will give us a whole new framework for interpreting and analyzing the built world."

—Pauline Saliga, Executive Director, Society of Architectural Historians

"The SAH has set forth a bold and exciting vision for integrating multimedia features to enhance the study and understanding of architectural history and the built environment. We are honored to partner with the Society in this endeavor and excited about the opportunities the new digital environment creates not only for JSAH but for other disciplines as well."

—Rebecca Simon, Associate Director, University of California Press and Director of the Journals + Digital Publishing Division.
