PACIFIC HISTORICAL REVIEW

The history of American expansion to the Pacific and beyond

PACIFIC HISTORICAL REVIEW

The Pacific Historical Review, established in 1932, is the official journal of the Pacific Coast Branch of the American Historical Association. The PHR publishes articles on the history of American expansion, the post-frontier developments of the twentieth-century American West, and the interconnections between American overseas expansion and the recent West.

Every 170-page issue of the PHR features an extensive section devoted to book reviews, plus frequent review essays. The “Historical News” section provides you with information about key figures in the PCB-AHA as well as announcements for fellowships and awards. The PHR also includes notes and documents, historiographic essays, and forums on historical topics.

“Pacific Historical Review provides a high-quality mix of articles and reviews concerned with the North American West, American expansionism, and U.S. interactions with peoples and nations around the Pacific. Among its many virtues are its commitments to supporting truly transnational scholarship and to invigorating regional histories.”

JOHN FINDLAY
University of Washington

“PHR is the go-to journal for the best new work on the wider realms of the American frontier and the Pacific world.”

JOHN MACK FARAGHER
Director, Howard R. Lamar Center for the Study of Frontiers and Borders,
Yale University
